to ease your Ozorian

homesickness.

Located at a magical address, Hold utca 13 (Moon Street 13) in the otherwise quite touristy District V in the heart of Budapest, you can check out the world's first LIGHT ART MUSEUM (LAM). While visiting current "Light Revolution" exhibition, you can also get a chance to be awed by one of Budapest's 19th century architectural treasures, as LAM is situated and plays with the spaces of the grand Hold Street Market Hall built in 1891.

Also in the same district, at Ferenciek Tere 10 (Ferenciek Square), don't miss the Immersive Digital Art Space and Interactive Exhibition of Light/Sound/Art/Magic of CINEMA MYSTICA. Just what you need to send you flashbacking to your sweetest festival memories, a sensory journey that leads across various new media installations.

FOLLOW THE WHITE RABBIT...?

In Chinese astrology 2023 is the Lunar Year of the Yin Water Rabbit. We can still absorb and use this energy before the Year of the Dragon starts on February 9, 2024! Yin Water is a very flowy energy, "flexible", peaceful, and patient. Rabbit behaviour? Cautious, seeks safety, slowly approaching. Also known to be the luckiest out of all the 12 animals in Chinese Astrology. After the Tiger Year (2022), and its intensity, the Rabbit way of existence is cultivating peace and patience. Yin Water brings fog and mist as well, volatile energies. This indicates that during this period we may encounter unexpected situations, testing both our patience and our ability to adapt. What goes around comes around - now much more quickly, than at other times - watch out for Instant Karma. The Rabbit doesn't fight as a predator, her power lies in collaboration and diplomacy. Communication can be tricky during this period, so it is really important to be clear, and to find the right tone. We can easily react with resistance to others' opinions. It's time to be more open and accepting, to nurture that community vibe. We Stay open and trust in the flow of the Universe.

At first it seems as though things exist outside one another. The sun is not the moon. This galaxy is not another galaxy. You are outside me. But looking deeply, we see that things are all woven. We cannot take the sun out of the flower or the oxygen out of the tree. We cannot take anything out of anything else. We are the mountains and rivers, we are the sun and stars. Everything matters. As soon as we realize that things do not exist outside one another, we touch the deepest level of the cosmic. We realize that we cannot take the water out of the wave. And we cannot take the wave out of the water. Just as the wave is the water itself, we are the ultimate.

MYCELIUM; A METAPHOR FOR THINKING ABOUT HUMAN CONNECTION

This year, the festival's inspirational metaphor, artistically and message-wise was 'mycelium'. It came after last year's post-pandemic reunion, when we all experienced just how vital being connected is, how each and every one of us play an important part in spreading essential "nutrients" for the mind and soul, sharing our knowledge, learning, teaching, caring and loving. We are all connected, we are all one.

Without mycelium, plants cannot reach maturity. The same is true for us! Without human connection, we don't reach maturity. We stay locked in our own worlds perhaps unable to meet our own needs and assume that others should meet them on our behalf. Or we may make attempts to meet our needs by making demands instead of an approach that uses connection and negotiation so that we can understand how all of our needs can be met. Our species got to where we are because of our ability to work together. Without connection, we are stunted in our growth and development. Mycelium has the potential to break down harmful toxins in the environment and turn them into useable nutrients for our ecosystem. Similarly, healthy human connection has the potential to help us work through the challenges that often feel "toxic" in our culture. This fungus can be used to build new structures and possibly even help us to inhabit a new planet. Extending this metaphor once again, I wonder what human connection could help us build? If we were to learn how to communicate our needs with authenticity and clarity, perhaps more of our needs would be met. With more needs met, we could potentially have more people who feel whole and capable of contributing. If we connect to one another and drop the superficiality, perhaps we could find a place to accept a wider range of human characteristics, thus encouraging human creativity and innovation. I wonder what we could accomplish if each of us felt valued and safe and free? The possibilities are exciting!
